WRITING ROOM

FREDERICK LOESER AND COMPANY, INC.
BROOKLYN-NEW YORK

Friday. —

Dear Hubby: —

You no doubt are wondering why the stationery, I'll tell you why. Because I am so stupid, — that's the reason. I wrote to you earlier in the day, and put your letter into my drawer until I sent off. One of the Doctors' wife came down with the man think to take her hubby back to his office as the weather out is frightful; — cold wet snow, which melts as it falls and the result is a wet miserable, cold slush all over the ground. She offered to drive me up to 14th St surbury, which of course delighted me. In my hurry to get off, I left half of the thing I had laid out to take with me in the drawer. Among them was your letter. I do hope it was in the drawer I left them & not on the counter as the letter I rec'd from you to-day was with it. That is enough! I will drop the other letter just as soon as I get in to-morrow morning. Am sorry honey, but you should worry, you are in another letter again this week. And here I waited all week for Friday when I expected such a big fat one — and what did I get? Such a tiny stingy dingy one. But to-morrow! Gosh! that will be the day, eh?

Just did some shopping. Fourty nine cents worth. Not in this store either. Bought a collar & cuff set in one of the stores near by. Some reckless wife you have, eh? I spent all that money in one place without a prick of the conscience. Hardened! That's me all over.

Rather like this paper. Think I'll take some with me as I am running rather low on paper, and Rose refuses to let me have some of her's. I'll tell you, honey she is getting something awful. I suppose she wants it to write to "Leslie" an nothing like making a good impression. Good handwriting and good paper. What could be better?

Have carried this somehow with nonsense. Now shall tell you how much I love you which is not nonsense. Love you heaps & heaps — bunches & bunches. With all my love, hugs & kisses, I'll say "au revoir".

Your loving wifie
